If you are concerned that our legislators seem to care less and less about the constitution as the standard of this great country's laws and

If you ever feel you don't have time to take action or are afraid that your voice alone can't make a difference.

We

-track those bills that undermine our individual liberties, states' rights, and national sovereignty.

-provide correspondence to let your elected officials know in seconds that you will not stand for it - combining your voice with thousands.

-notify you how they really voted so we are no longer at the mercy of relying on their silence, excuses, or public relations machines.

If Paul Revere rode today, he'd probably warn,

“The Senate Is Coming. The Senate is Coming.”

Have you seen this list? -- 15 grievous violations of the Constitution in the past fifteen months by our own elected, supposed representatives.

Thomas Jefferson said that if the country was going to fall it would only fall from the inside. We are afraid his warning is coming true.

1) Bi-partisan legislators, contrary to the constitution, handed the right to declare war to the executive branch in any situation "affiliated with terrorism." (HR 1540)

2) A bill is passed 388-3 outlawing protests within the vicinity of any building or person guarded by secret service. But that "vicinity" and the occasions where free speech doesn't apply are not defined. (HR 347)

3) The president issued a "martial law" executive order declaring the right to nationalize industry, patents, and personnel at any time as long as it is "in writing." (Mar 16, 2012)

4) Our attorney general, Eric Holder, (who we thought was the top enforcer of the law and defender of the constitution) said, "'Due process' and 'judicial process' are not one and the same... The Constitution guarantees due process, not judicial process." (Mar 5, 2012)

5) House and senate created a "super committee," putting decisions in the hands of twelve people and mandating that if no consensus is reached, then certain defaults become automatic law.

6) The secretary of defense Leon Panetta tells a congressional committee that military engagement requires permission from the international community but that the defense department can decide whether or not to consult with congress (Mar 7, 2012).

7) Bi-partisan legislation supports right to detain without representation. (HR 1540)

8) Several legislators are exploiting high profile social tragedies to push gun control.

9) The department of justice signs off on bank fraud cases with hundred million dollar penalties, which seems like a lot of money until remembering that the frauds were of billions of dollars and that these settlements then protect the guilty from future civil or criminal suits from the victimized cities, retirement funds, or private citizens.

10) In the meantime, politicians and would-be politicians of both parties collect the largest portions of their campaign funds from the same banking (as well as drug and military) companies being protected.

11) SOPA and PIPA are nearly rushed through to enable the government to shut down websites without due process under the guise of protecting intellectual property.

12) Their replacement, CISPA, just passed the house, greasing the information sharing between the government and service providers.

13) The NSA prepares to open its massive data collecting and sorting center collecting almost all wired and wireless transmissions with cooperation from cell services and isp's.

14) The senate just passed a bill, MAP-21, that allows the IRS to restrict travel of those owing taxes. (S 1813) 15) This bill also mandates that all vehicles include "event recorders" tracking everything from gps location to the rate of acceleration.
